Passing the shallow, passing through the sandy baãas, comes the dark - black and roaring. In a invisible path, a new line for them to follow. For a hot satellus. For a new samio. NARRATOR, p. 213 This passage, taken from the last Page of the novel, is an echo of the opening lines of the novel. However, instead of probing the depths to describe Abalone, Parrett rewrite the lines to concentrate above the surface, where invisible paths lead to a warm, new place for Miles and Joe. In addition to giving romance a sense of an end to the full dial, Parrett's reconfiguration of the opening lines shows the contrast between the concerns of Miles in the useful and at the end of the story. It is no longer depends on "bringing" Abalone in the cold and dangerous coastal water, he is free to sail for a better life with his sister Joe. "This is for you," he said, and put the tooth in his moms. "For luck." Miles looked at George, their eyes full of gaps. "You found him," he said. George and Miles, p. 212 At the end of the novel, before they separate, George puts the white tubing teeth necklace in Miles' mother. With this gesture, Miles realize that George must have been the one who found Harry's body; He was removed Harry's necklace to return to Miles. In this passage, Parrett presents an instance of situational irony in which the person who happened to find Harry was the same man Harry had taken refuge. Irony injects more emotional meaning into the shark teeth necklace, which now symbolizes Miles a connection is not just to Uncle Nick, but also to Harry. And the man entered of evag kein elements are the same man Harry was the same man Harry was the same man Harry had taken refuge. Miles looked at the water. Perfect glass of transactions, empty and waiting and without wind yet. Still not. And he could not believe he would give up clean waves for that, to Harry. But he was going to do so. He had already put his board in the sand. NARRATOR, p. At the end of the novel, Miles turns in his mind to the first scene in the book, when he asks Harry to try to find a shark egg on the beach to keep him busy while Miles and Joe surf. As soon as he says, he realizes he will take Harry Ages to find one because he never looks in the right places. In this passage, Miles decides to surf, but instead of finding a shark egg he can plant for Harry to find. With this passage, Parrett demonstrates how Miles puts Harry's needs because of small gestures like this, for his greatest efforts about the novel to protect his newest sister vulnerable. "Maybe the next time," he said, but Harry didn't think it was likely. When Joe finally returned in his clothes, he began to unhook things from Dinghy, Themos, and Tin glasses and the carpet and the sandwich. As long as they have no wait for Miles, even if Joe said he had to wait because Miles couldIn the water forever, even if it was cold, and Harry had to have one of the Sandes now. "This place is old," he said, his mouth full of pion. Joe made a sound, but was not listening. He was in another sight, maybe he was still out on the water with Miles. But it didn't matter. This place was old. Harry knew. So old like the world. Chapter Two Miles came in with the men, with Martin and Jeff and the Father, and did not speak. No one spoke on the way to the boat. He had not been able to eat his toast at home in the early darkness, and now only at dawn he wanted to have. The maid was empty on this first day must be man alone as men come down. Enough now, it should take his place. Like the sister before him, he must fill the gap that Uncle Nick left. Because the bank now owns the boat. Because the bank had everything. The boat dragged and tore its way through the heads, and Miles felt that the channel grab, pull into its hard. She was weak, Lady Ida, looked old now, and the cross was slow. She deleted from the deepest part of the channel, leaving a big awakening of summons to the trees, and Miles knew it was what would have happened here. Where Uncle Nick would have been dragged alone in the dark, where the trail went stronger. And they never found him. Not even a little. Not his boots. Not his boots. Not his boots. said Uncle Nick must have gone to see Moura. He said he would not stop worrying about the boats were out. But Nick would not leave him alone. He would not stop worrying about the boats were out. But Nick would not leave him alone. He would not stop worrying about the boats were out. But Nick would not leave him alone. He would not stop worrying about the boats were out. But Nick would not leave him alone. bar and, in the end, his father told him to go to see the lightning To check or simply shut up about it. And Miles knew exactly how dark it was that night, the sky went out of the cloud so thick that nothing went through - no stars or moon or anything. Uncle Nick couldn't have seen the dinghy or the earth or even his own hand in front of his face. And everyone forgot about him outside because it was the night of the accident. That was the night everything changed.  Martin touched his shoulder, he was close. "It's okay," he said. Dad and Jeff were in the cabin and Jeff was looking at him again, so Miles looked away. He slipped his yellow jacket over his shirt. The father had nothing small enough for him, so he had to use the size of a man and it was baggy, hung far below his hands. I'd almost better not use one. Anyway, he'd be soaked. The only part of it that would be warm was the head under the tight wool watch cover that made your scalp. He rolled his sleeves, put his gloves on. Bruny was getting clear in the new light. Miles watched the color of the surface change - come to life. And even if they were still out in the bottom, far from the earth, there were places where the water stood up as if a hill was rising, places where the water was angry. And it wasn't a spike in the shell. It was the current entering rocks that hid below, rocks that you couldn't see even when the tide was low. And if you didn't know what the increase in the water meant, you'd never guess those rocks were there. Dangers of Bruny." 1 2 3 Excerpted by Favel Parrett. Sand mining is the extraction of sand, mainly through an open pit (or sand pit) but sometimes mined from beaches and inland dunes or dredged from ocean and river beds. Sand is often used in manufacturing, for example as an abrasive or in concrete. It is also used on icy and snowy roads usually mixed with salt, to lower the melting point temperature, on the road surface. The word thou / ð ao / is a second-person singular pronoun in English. It is now largely archaic, having been replaced in most contexts by the word you. It is used in parts of Northern England and in Scots (/ðu/). Thou is the nominative form; the oblique/objective form is thee (functioning as both accusative and dative), the possessive is thy (adjective) or thine (as an adjective before a ...
